ON THE COVER

The Cook Memorial Public Library District’s Aspen Drive Branch in Vernon Hills, featured here, was first built in 2010. Library service in the area dates back to 1909 when the Alpha Club (now the Libertyville Women’s Club) began a subscription library housed in a local drugstore. Later, the library took up residence in the home of Ansel B. Cook, whose property had been bequeathed in 1921 to the town of Libertyville for park and library purposes. The first library building to be designed as such was built in 1968, and the library was organized into a district in 1973. Today, Aspen Drive along with its sibling branch the Cook Park Library serves a total of 60,000 people in the communities of Libertyville, Vernon Hills, Green Oaks, and Mundelein.

We have 14 showplace examples of library renovations and expansions from communities as large as Chicago, with five branch renovations or new buildings; to those with service populations of 6,000–7,000. They are all public libraries; mostly renovations with only five completely new buildings. Some innovative models (of both architecture and library service) are on display, such as a new building that houses the library along with Chicago Housing Authority (CHA) apartments, an open concept based in safety considerations that is also visually attractive, and using the physical layout to enhance staff and patron engagement. Following this showcase is a companion piece featuring an example in converse: What happens when a library building is repurposed into something else?

In 2019, the Betty Jane Brimmer Center for the Performing Arts opened its doors, in the former Peoria Heights Public Library Building. This Mid-Century Modernist architectural gem was purpose-designed as a public library by noted Peoria Architect Richard Doyle in 1963. Doyle, who was influenced by both Frank Lloyd Wright and Mies van der Rohe, completed a number of significant projects in his hometown of Peoria Heights, many of which are still extant. Its ensemble of horizontal earth-hugging volumes, large expanses of glazing (including clerestories), and exposed steel elements (including a floating stairway) are all hallmarks of Modernist design.

Thirty-seven years after it opened, Peoria Heights Public Library left its town center location and moved westward, near a new bike and walking trail. The current Peoria Heights Public Library has been located at 816 East Glen Avenue since the year 2000. Since this move, the old Modernist library building at 1327 East Kelly Avenue has had several other lives, and was at one time slated for demolition.

In 2018, the old library building was purchased by Peoria Heights philanthropist Kim Blickenstaff, who restored it to its original beauty, transforming it into a performing arts and civic gathering venue. Numerous elements from the original library and its design were repurposed or reinvented. These included casework used to display and store the collection of long-playing (LP) albums, and multi-colored Mid-Century Modern chandeliers in the former main reading room.

What people are saying:

“This is such a beautiful place to be and enjoy new artistic events together! We are looking forward to all the new experiences and fun times at the Betty J ayne!”

“It’s absolutely beautiful and a perfect atmosphere for a cultural experience that is much needed in Peoria Heights and Peoria!”

“Beautiful place filled with beautiful people. This venue will be a centerpiece in Central Illinois. Music, the arts, special functions, performances, education all under one roof, in an effort to gather our community together.”

“This is an intriguing piece of architecture with great potential to be one of Central Illinois’ premier event centers!”

ILA Strategic Plan: Current Progress on the Strategy for a Culture of Diversity and Inclusion in the Association

In the June 2019 issue of the ILA Reporter we brought you a feature that described the ILA strategic plan for 2019–2022, how that plan was developed, and how it will be used. The article affirms the vision and mission statements of ILA and articulates four core strategies: Advocacy, Delivery of Member Value, A Culture of Diversity and Inclusion, and Leadership. Each strategy contains goals and desired outcomes.

Although the plan is still quite new, ILA and its various committees are already working to put these strategies into action. But this plan belongs to all ILA members! We can all help keep the momentum going by keeping track of the progress already made. This article specifically looks at progress made on the Culture of Diversity and Inclusion strategy, which includes two goals: “In the profession” and “In the association.” The latter goal is of course more internal, and Diane Foote, the Executive Director of ILA, reports that the ILA Executive Board has identified it “as a top priority,” making it an ideal start for an examination of the implementation of the strategic plan.

According to Foote, the most significant step ILA has taken on creating a culture of diversity and inclusion since the approval of the strategic plan has been adoption of the “Statement of Appropriate Conduct” for ILA-sponsored conferences and events. The creation of this statement was a proactive step meant to ensure event attendees that ILA is committed to providing an environment conducive to learning and enjoyment by all, “regardless of gender, sexual orientation, gender identity, gender expression, disability, physical appearance, race, ethnicity, religion, or other individual or group identity.” At the same time that the Association adopted the statement, they developed and implemented a process for investigating and adjudicating complaints and secured training for ILA member leaders and staff who would be responsible for responding to and acting upon complaints, thereby following words with action. ILA has also adopted a third-party, anonymous reporting option, in the interest of protecting the privacy of anyone reporting a violation. Both the conduct statement and process were completed and in place for the 2019 ILA Annual Conference, although no violations were reported. Foote states, “We know of no other library association that has gone this far to ensure the ability to participate fully and safely in our events; ILA is truly a leader in this regard.”

The Association itself is taking substantial steps to increase the “functionality, diversity, inclusivity, and recognition” of ILA committees and volunteer systems. “Inclusivity” in this sense pertains not only to geographic diversity and diversity in types of libraries but also to participation among members of traditionally underrepresented cultural, racial, or ethnic groups. In order to appeal to a larger audience of potential committee members and break down barriers that may have been discouraging committee volunteers, the Association has put into place several new methods for members to indicate their interest in committee work, including sharing a Google form rather than requiring members to log in to the ILA website to update their interests (although that option still exists). The 2019-20 Nominating Committee has also opened the process to the membership at large to suggest nominations or self-nominations, rather than relying solely on the committee members to make suggestions, thereby casting a wider, more diverse net for those nominations. ILA now also has a Zoom account for online conferencing that is available for all committees and forums to use, enabling participation among members who are not able to attend meetings in person due to geographic distance or difficulty securing time away from the library. In addition, efforts at making committee work more transparent to the general membership include the adoption of an ILA Open Meetings Policy and the posting of committee reports to the ILA Executive Board on committees’ pages on the ILA website.

ILA has also created two new forums specifically designed to focus on broadening participation: one for Students and New Professionals, and one for Small and Rural Libraries. Student members can now also benefit from a new partnership between ILA and ALA to offer joint student membership in both associations for one low price ($42, compared to $25 for ILA + $39 for ALA, total $64), addressing both strategic goals of a Culture of Diversity and Inclusion in the Profession and in the Association. The Small and Rural Libraries Forum was inspired by the Association of Rural and Small Libraries national conference in Springfield in 2018, which proved popular among Illinois librarians, thus demonstrating a statewide need.

Since 2018, ILA has offered complimentary exhibit space at the ILA Annual Conference to the ALA ethnic affiliates operating in the state, and this is being done specifically in order to increase engagement among members of ethnic, cultural, and racial groups that are traditionally underrepresented in librarianship. Representing CALA (Chinese American Library Association), Mingyan Li, Liping Song, and Qi Chen state that they are appreciative of ILA’s efforts to embrace the diversity of such groups. They state, “The fact that we help each other advertise our mutual events, and that we participate in ILA hosted events with a CALA Midwest table are some indications of the progress” being made on the strategic plan. In addition, The Sylvia Murphy Williams Fund has been retitled the Diversity Scholarship Fund, although it continues to support the ILA Williams Scholars program. Retitling the Fund allows for additional diversity initiatives, and its fundraising is ongoing, led by a Giving Tuesday campaign specifically targeted towards it, with the ILA Diversity Committee considering initiatives to recommend to the ILA Executive Board. Hannah Rapp, co-chair of the ILA Diversity Committee, reports that the committee is still in the process of adjusting their priorities around the strategic plan, but they are working on recommendations to the ILA Board (and other committees) on how to promote an inclusive and equitable environment within the organization and make it more welcoming for diverse library staff in Illinois. The committee also plans to nominate “rock stars” from around the state for different ILA awards in order to recognize their good work.

The ILA Executive Board approved the 2019-2022 strategic plan in April of 2019. In under a year, then, many small, but substantial, steps have been taken in order to support the strategy of fostering a Culture of Diversity and Inclusion. These steps are specific to supporting the goals of “In the profession” and “In the Association,” and they are important cultural changes. It will be interesting to see the ultimate outcomes, and it will also be exciting to see what changes come as a result of the other strategies in the plan. ILA

Migration: Changes Coming for CARLI

The 91 academic and research I-Share member libraries in the Consortium of Academic and Research Libraries in Illinois (CARLI) have been undertaking a major migration, moving from Voyager to Alma. While both Voyager and Alma are Ex Libris products, they are quite different. Voyager is an integrated library system (ILS) with software clients installed on individual computers and databases on CARLI-operated servers. Clients include those for circulation, acquisitions, cataloging, and others. Alma is a cloud-based library service platform that incorporates a variety of library services: acquisitions, resource sharing, fulfillment, resource management, and many others. While Voyager was designed for a print-based library collection, Alma was designed to manage electronic and physical collections. Included with Alma is Ex Libris’ discovery service Primo VE, which allows patron discovery of the library’s physical collection, electronic resources, and I-Share consortial holdings and resource sharing.

This migration is a huge change for these academic libraries, and it has been, and continues to be, a great deal of work for the consortium and for the individual I-Share libraries. Because the migration will bring such dramatic changes, it may be helpful to review the timeline of steps in the migration process, to understand how we got here, as well as some of the expected developments at the end of the migration process.

TIMELINE

Although CARLI had been discussing and exploring potential Voyager replacements for several years, Alma was not announced as the new system until October 2018. Since that time, however, much has happened. The migration includes three major phases: Onboarding (January-February 2019), Vanguard (March–June 2019), and the Full Test and Implementation Phase (July 2019–June 2020). Each of these phases has had, and will have, its own vital importance as academic libraries ready themselves for the migration.

The Onboarding Phase (Phase 1) really began the process of acquainting CARLI libraries with Alma and with the migration process. Project leaders from each I-Share institution were identified. In addition, libraries with Voyager acquisitions data were identified as well as libraries with Voyager course management data, as this data would need to be specially considered. CARLI also determined which link resolvers or electronic management systems the different libraries were using. Finally, the Vanguard institutions were chosen: Newberry, North Central College (whose Oesterle Library is pictured, right), Southern Illinois University Carbondale, University of Illinois at Chicago, and University of Illinois Urbana-Champaign. Of all the libraries that volunteered, these libraries were chosen based on their different sizes and operations models.

The Vanguard Phase (Phase 2) marked the beginning of increased, more intense activity for the migration, not just among the Vanguard institutions, but consortium-wide. The Vanguard libraries worked with CARLI and with Ex Libris to do a rapid data migration in order to try out the migration plans and create a test environment of configuration settings. CARLI also set up an Alma Network Zone for data to be used throughout the consortium (like a union catalog) and set up the resource sharing function. I-Share libraries began examining and cleaning up their data. The test environments of the Vanguard libraries and the Network Zone were replaced in October when the full test environments were delivered to all 91 CARLI libraries. This phase was most useful in helping all CARLI libraries to begin to more fully understand the scope of the migration as well as assist CARLI and Ex Libris as they planned for the migration of all I-Share libraries.

CURRENT PHASE

We are now in Phase 3, the Implementation Phase. This phase officially began on July 11, 2019 with a kick-off webinar. It will end on June 24, 2020 at which point all I-Share libraries will officially go live with Alma. At the beginning of the implementation, the various I-Share libraries turned in a modified migration form to CARLI. This form reflected some defaults that would be used across the consortium but also allowed the individual libraries to define for themselves their services and the ways in which those services would be delivered. Next, each library filled out and submitted a Configuration Form, which provides the framework for the policy settings within Alma.

In October of 2019, all 91 I-Share libraries were given their own test environments. The test environments include the data that had been contained within the Voyager database for each institution as well as all e-resource data that each institution had designated to be migrated. These test environments will continue to be available to each library until the production loads become available in late spring of 2020. Some components currently within the test environments, such as configuration settings or vendor records, will persist into the production environment, while other components like bibs, holdings, or patrons will be wiped clean. Within their test environments each library is reviewing its data and configuration settings and testing data to ensure that it migrated over as expected and that there are no unanticipated issues. Each library is likewise testing how well Alma is integrating with other library functions, such as printers or self-check machines.

Within each I-Share library, designated faculty and staff have been busy working to qualify for Alma Certification, if they have not already. Those seeking certification must review numerous lessons in several modules then pass a certification test. Libraries must have certified users before they are able to make modifications to their configuration settings.

I-Share libraries have been performing many other tasks to prepare for the migration. CARLI has offered office hours nearly once a week since May, giving library staff a chance to discuss migration issues in a group and get answers to their questions. In addition, a series of webinars on Alma topics have been offered and several trainings have been held or will be held at various academic libraries across the state. At the same time, each library must determine how all staff and librarians within their institutions are to be trained—Will some webinars be mandatory? Should the library hold its own individual trainings with its own people?

CARLI recently rolled out the Primo VE discovery service to the libraries, so library staff are busy acquainting themselves with how that works as well. Each I-Share library is now working to determine how Primo VE will synchronize with their various campus student information systems.

Many other preparations will be taking place before the official go-live date. Among them, CARLI committees, such as the Resource Sharing Committee, will examine current consortial policies and recommend changes to make the implementation easier or reflect what practice will look like with Alma.

Alma will help streamline work at I-Share libraries while also helping to expand the possibilities of how services are offered. Though the migration process is long and somewhat intimidating, Alma has promise to be worth it. The CARLI academic libraries, like all libraries in our state, have a common goal to offer excellent service to our patrons. Alma will offer patrons a more easily understandable interface and get them more of the information they need.
